

BIG SHIFT DUE IN IN COMMITTEES

Pennsylvania Will Have Seven Unless Seniority Is Abolished

SCRAMBLE IS BEGUN

Scores of Important Posts to Be Filled; Republicans Losing Their Jobs

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—The Pennsylvania House of Representatives will have to fill 70 positions in its committees by the end of the session, unless the seniority rule is abolished.

All told there are 66 standing committees, but some of them have little to do with important legislation. The seven important committees Pennsylvania is expected to have are: Banking, claims, foreign affairs, judiciary, naval, post-office and printing, a gain of two. Iowa will have four—all big ones. They are: Ways and means, all powerful of itself; roads, agriculture and insular affairs, although chairman Tower of the latter could relinquish control of the roads, education, lost to Ohio through the shift of Representative Fess to the senate.

Illinois in the lead. Appropriation, the largest committee of the house, and rules will pass from Kansas to New York. Rivers and harbors, accounts and Indian affairs will remain with New York, which has few Indiana like those who used to be there.

In the present house, with a solid delegation, Ohio has the chairmanship of only one big committee, education. Ohio members insist the old seniority system ought not to keep them out of honors they claim as their due.

The far west will hold on to several important committees, including immigration, labor, military and territories.

Minnesota last Tuesday lost the heads of judiciary and postoffice, holding on to pensions and the northwest is beginning a clamor to get greater representation. The committee on expositions and industrial arts looks as if a tornado had struck it—8 of the 16 republicans being off after March 4. Indiana will get the chairmanship of the census, which must frame the bill for house reapportionment.

Scramble for places. There will be a big shift around, regardless of whether the seniority system holds up or falls down. About 100 vacancies are to be filled on appropriation. A scramble already has started for four of the eight republican places on the rules committee, which will be vacant.

Massachusetts will cling to merchant marine and interstate commerce, two committees in which important legislation will be considered. The steering committee, which shapes legislation, consists of seven members, two of whom will not come back, Greene, of Vermont was elected to the senate and Dunn of New York, did not return. The veteran who held over are Darrow, Pennsylvania; Longworth, Ohio; Sanders, Indiana; Anderson, Minnesota; and Nolan, California. New England and New York will insist on continued representation.

Two committees may be abolished. One is woman suffrage and the other is control of the liquor traffic. Members say they might as well be wiped out.

As chairman of the committee on committees, which picks men for the hundreds of places, Representative Mann of Illinois, the veteran of many legislative battles, occupies a position of power greater than that of any other man in shaping the organization of the next house.

River Mussel Not Wild Animal, Iowa High Court Decides

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—The fresh water mussel of the Mississippi valley from whose shell is manufactured (pearl) buttons, is the property of the owner of land through which it flows, the non-navigable stream of its habitat, the supreme court held today in a case brought by James R. McKee and others in Missouri against Benjamin Gratz.

The controversy attracted wide attention because of the button industry and brought questions whether the mussel is a "wild animal." The seven important cases decided the case said mussels should not be classed with wild birds and fish, which may move beyond the jurisdiction of the owner of the land. The lower court held that fishermen taking mussels from non-navigable streams could be prosecuted as trespassers and the owner of land through which the stream flowed could recover damages from those who purchased shells from trespassers. The judgment was affirmed by the supreme court in principle.

COUNTY STARTS SHOOTING PROBE

Action by County Attorney's Office Hinges Upon Greenwood

With but little hope held by doctors at the Oklahoma hospital for the recovery of J. C. Ivey, Greenwood, alleged king of Tulsa bootleggers, who was shot through the intestines and liver Saturday at 424 E. Thirtieth by Ivey, 26-year-old wife of J. C. Ivey of Skiatook, the county attorney's office started an investigation of the case.

Although Tom Wallace, assistant county attorney in charge of the investigation, spent the entire day gathering up the loose ends of the shooting affair Monday, he would give out no word regarding the progress of the probe, but indicated that there would be little in the matter until the exact extent of Greenwood's injuries could be determined.

Wallace declared the county was investigating every angle of the affair, but that Greenwood's statements would determine the course to be taken in prosecution of the case. If Greenwood dies, a charge of murder will be placed against the woman, but if he recovers the charge of assault with intent to kill. However, if the wounded man declared that the girl was not to blame or dies without making a statement regarding the shooting, Wallace stated that it would be difficult to convict the girl.

Mrs. Ivey and Art Greenwood, Ott's brother, were questioned at the county attorney's office, but nothing regarding their statements was given out. Art Greenwood visited the hospital early Monday and had a short talk with the injured man, according to hospital attaches.

John Ward, counsel for the Ivey woman, Monday gave a summary of the girl's story and of events leading up to the shooting. According to Ward's account, the woman placed the blame on Greenwood, intimating that he had attacked her. The attorney said the girl told him that she and her brother went to Greenwood's apartment to get her personal effects and take them to her home at Skiatook. She said that Greenwood sent her brother away on some pretext and then started abusing her because she left him and married Ivey.

After a few minutes they started to take a car ride at Greenwood's instance, according to the story, but after visiting a filling station she insisted on returning to the apartment and getting her belongings. On the way back she said that Greenwood pulled a gun, but that she grabbed it out of his hand. After they entered the apartment they continued quarreling and the shooting followed.

No details regarding the immediate quarrel, which resulted in the shooting, were given out by Ward.

WAR OVER COUNTY SEAT IS FEARED

Clash in South Dakota Imminent as Recount Is Demanded

CHAMBERLAIN, S. D., Nov. 13.—Oxocoma, Lyman county, is an armed camp today, reports from there state, following a clash Saturday night of armed forces representing factions in a county seat fight which threatened an old-time border war.

When the official count of ballots cast last Tuesday in Lyman county showed a proposition to remove the county seat from Oxocoma to Kennebec had carried by 11 votes, Oxocoma demanded a recount. To prevent such action, posses of armed men were sent to the county seat. Saturday night invaded Oxocoma in four motor trucks, took the ballot boxes from the clerk of the court and loaded them into the trucks.

The trucks were about to leave the courthouse when Oxocoma citizens were aroused to what was taking place. They rallied and held the trucks and occupants at the point of guns until Judge Hartine was summoned and issued a restraining order, forbidding the removal of the ballots. The Kennebec supporters were marched out of town by the townsmen who restored the ballots to the courthouse.

The official recount of the vote will be held late this week. While no shots were fired Saturday night, a regular old-time border war was threatened with both sides armed to the teeth.

Open letter to my friends, customers and the public:

For the past eight years I have sold hundreds of Oriental Rugs in Tulsa, and have furnished many fine homes with the choicest rugs that can be obtained from the hand looms of the Orient.

All through those years I have conducted my business the regular way, but on this trip I am obliged to offer my matchless collection at auction, even at a tremendous sacrifice—in order that I may be able to raise a certain necessary amount in the shortest time possible to meet pressing obligations, from which no business man is immune during his business career.

In order to accomplish the above, I secured the services of an Oriental Rug Auctioneer of national fame who in turn made arrangements with a local auctioneer to sell my rugs as a helper to them, under their license.

We auctioned two days and were not molested, but during the Friday afternoon session both my out-of-town auctioneer and myself were arrested and taken to the station where bonds were given for our appearance at a later date.

I was told that the complaint was made by a local dealer. I express my regrets to my friends and customers who were present and thereby annoyed during that unpleasant incident.

I am an American citizen; have paid taxes to the city of Tulsa several months ago; therefore, I am entitled to the same privileges as any other law-abiding business man in the city.

I assure you that these rugs were selected by me personally both in Constantinople and New York to sell privately to my select clientele in Tulsa and other cities in Oklahoma.

In conclusion I will say that I will continue my auction sales as long as I see fit—twice daily—and it is nobody's business if I give my rugs away.

After the auction sales are discontinued I will remain and conduct my business the regular way. My guarantee stands good for both auction and private sale purchases.

This is a chance of a lifetime to be able to purchase these rare Oriental Rugs at the price that you wish to pay.
